

RADIO PUBLIC SERVICE ANNOUNCEMENT

The Indiana Chapter of the Arthritis Foundation is leading a nationwide “Arthritis and Agriculture” initiative as part of a 4-year USDA National AgrAbility Project grant. The National AgrAbility Project assists farmers, ranchers, other agricultural workers, and family members impacted by disability. This grant will fund the promotion of arthritis awareness to those agricultural workers affected by arthritis or any of its related diseases.

Amber Wolfe, AgrAbility Project Coordinator at the Arthritis Foundation, will be working on the local, state, regional, and national levels to promote awareness of arthritis as a disability in the agricultural industry. “I grew up in an agricultural community, watching members of my family and other local farmers battle arthritis on a daily basis,” Wolfe says. “I am very excited at the opportunity to help those with arthritis in the agricultural industry. The program’s initiatives and educational programs are needed in the rural communities in America.”

For more information on hosting an “Arthritis and Agriculture” seminar in your area, or for more information about AgrAbility, please call 1-800-783-2342 or visit us online at www.agrability.org.